For longer periods of storage, fuel stabiliser recommended

Since the beginning of 2011, mineral oil companies have been obligated by an EU directive to offer automotive gas containing 10% bioethanol at their petrol stations. This fuel has the trade name E 10.

However, by mixing bioethanol, the ageing process is accelerated by vaporisation, among other things. Consequently, the fuel loses its ease of ignition over time. "For this reason, we recommend the use of a fuel stabiliser for longer periods of storage," says Michael Wicke, Manager of After Sales & Service Europe at WOLF-Garten holding company, MTD Products AG.
